

We are incredibly grateful for your support

Dear We Care Family.

It is certainly an understatement to say that we live in very challenging times. And it's my sincerest hope that you and your family are passing through this crisis unharmed.

However, I can tell you that many of the families we serve at We Care are not.

From job loss to sickness – and the amplified stress of both on vulnerable families – numerous children with whom we work have been having the most difficult time of their lives.

But I also want to acknowledge the incredible efforts many of our families have been making to give their children the support they need, combined with the efforts of We Care's teachers, therapists, and specialists to provide a safety net and opportunity to thrive.

While our programs were built on face-to-face treatments and interventions, our staff has adapted, innovated, and gone the extra mile to ensure that they're giving the best possible help. Via Zoom calls, activity packages, and remote therapies, We Care is there for every child.

And lastly, I want to thank you.

For 60 years now, everything we've accomplished for the generations of children we've served has been a result of generosity, compassion, and thoughtful partnerships with people like you. Thank you for investing in the health of our neighborhoods through directing your philanthropy where it is most needed and most effective.

Unlike all other years, we're not going to be able to gather at a fall gala to celebrate these efforts. And while we can't thank you in person in 2020, please know that our gratitude for your support has never been more heartfelt. Large or small, your contribution to We Care this season means we can continue offering hope for the families in our community with the most to overcome.

If you still share with us the belief that helping young, at-risk children change the direction of their lives is one of the best ways to help them and the community, please consider joining us as a partner again this year.

Thank you so much again for everything you've done for We Care. We wish you and your family happiness and health this holiday season!

Sincerely,

Pete
